ART AND THE RURAL LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGE

by Steven A. Barbash

Professor Barbash is a professional artist, illustrator and teacher. He joined the Juniata faculty in 1960 after earning a master of fine arts degree at Yale University. A graduate of Bard College (B.A., 1955), he has studied in New York, served as a draftsman-illustrator with the Navy in Pensacola, taught in New Haven, and has been represented in juried exhibitions throughout the east.

WITH THE GREAT DEBATES now centering on education, faculty members have found it necessary to re-evaluate the importance of their disciplines to their institutions and to education in general. The members who seem to have the easiest task are those who can jump on the "we-have-to-beat" band wagon. This now seems to include everyone from nutritionists to nuclear physicists. The humanist, and particularly that impractical campus eccentric, the artist, will find himself even more detached from his academic society if he is not able to verbalize his position.

Visual awareness and creativity are such important aspects of education that to ignore them or handle them haphazardly deprives the student and the community of something really vital. And they are often ignored, or so improperly treated that they were better off ignored. The problem does not seem to be as acute at the large institutions where the arts are a relatively inexpensive status symbol. However, the costs of adequate facilities, programs, performances, and displays do not drop proportionally with the size of the institution, and it is at the small rurally oriented college, the place that needs them most, that they suffer most.

Most small institutions feel that either there is something irrelevant about art, poetry, etc., or morally and practically corrupting. Even when this is not felt to any degree at all, such institutions often feel that they simply cannot afford such a luxury, and if they can afford it to some degree, then only as a superficial attachment to the main trunk of liberal education.

What Are They Missing?

It is oftentimes very difficult to convince people of the enormity of their loss, the quantity and quality of their error, when they do not realize that they are missing anything in the first place. It is as if a certain house which you pass every day had some magnificent interior, the knowledge and appreciation of which could reshape basic attitudes, opening up whole new vistas of judgment, and judgment not only particular to one discipline, but judgment that would be relevant to every phase of life. Consider how many esthetic decisions one makes with something so seemingly intangible as taste—decisions

VISUAL AWARENESS, CREATIVITY ARE REALLY VITAL

sions which are invariably based on a random collection of non-esthetic associations. If one is not introduced to the particular problems of visual experience, it is like feeling perfectly content constantly passing this house with everything to offer, only because what it offers, or the desire to inquire within, has never been stimulated.

The practical man, the man who enables the community to function as an economic unit, who in his more generous and enlightened phase gives money to help to direct the destiny of the college, often objects to the creative arts because they seem to perform no practical function. They seem not to help in achieving the "good life" which is such a universally accepted idea.

In such limited space it would be impossible to try to undermine, refute or even illuminate the idea of the "good life;" however, what is leisure for, once achieved? What are goods for? Obviously not simply to collect. Obviously, the esthetic considerations are the ones which govern the quality of the "good life"—whether it will really be a good life or simply an abundant materialistic one. To use some of the analogies I draw in approaching my own freshmen: we have all the technical and economic resources at most of our colleges for a building complex as big and as pertinent to our society as the Acropolis was to fifth century Athens. But why is it that one can visit campus after campus planned by people involved with learning, each physically larger than the Acropolis, yet the memory of one secondhand view from Greece haunts us while our many, many campuses are very soon forgotten?

Knowledge That Is Different

Never think that I mean for us to build Greek buildings. The real implication is that we should be Greek in the profounder sense: we should know ourselves and in knowing ourselves know the full range of our capabilities, both analytical and creative. Such an awareness will eventually alleviate some of the visual bankruptcy which makes it necessary for us to decorate our steel frame structures with the superficial appurtenances of other times in order to feel that they are in some way legitimate.

Dr. Harold Taylor cuts to the heart of the problem in his small book Art and the Intellect:

"... the practice of the arts and the creative arts themselves are too often excluded from the regular curriculum of school and college or given such a minor role in the educational process that they are unable to make the intellectual contribution of which they are supremely capable."

When human knowledge is considered to be an organized body of fact and ideas, it seems to exist by itself in time and space. In fact it does not. Knowledge does not exist until it is known by someone. It merely seems to exist because it can be recorded in symbols, words, and numbers. Few educators realize that dance, music, painting, design, and sculpture are forms of knowledge even though they do not express themselves in words. These arts can be talked about and facts can be assembled to describe their history and their characteristics, which is what most educators want to do with them, but that is not the most important thing about them as far as education is concerned. The important thing is the experience, the discipline and joy they give to those who engage in them and learn to value them. Such experience provides knowledge of a kind different from the knowledge expressed in words, but possessing a special kind of value."

Dr. Taylor is talking of the difficulties of a situation which most small institutions haven't even reached yet. He directs his speech to those who already have an adequate program dealing with art and history and the criticism and appreciation of art as an intellectual discipline or, in his terms, a discipline dealing with words. We can wholeheartedly agree with the idea that this is not the only kind of knowledge and certainly not the only kind of knowledge in art. Yet, our concern must be in establishing a background situation where both types of interests can be stimulated.

The classic objection to any new discipline is that there is insufficient student interest. However, though we must fulfill the expressed needs of our constituents, we must also fulfill those needs which they are not yet capable of expressing.

Who Is Michelangelo?

Just how acute is the need of the good student from the rural area? During my first year of teaching, my constant fear was that I was exceeding the areas where I could be sure that my students would have some familiarity with the material. But I never realized quite how far I was exceeding them until I asked. In one of my sections where I was trying to correlate the idea of structure as a key component of both literature and the visual arts, I was making references to Michelangelo. (May I preface the rest of these remarks by making it quite clear that my students were not stupid). However, when I asked how many people had ever heard of Michelangelo, there were six hands raised in a class of forty-six.

This was not an unusual class nor an unusual situation, and I would submit that it graphically illustrates the extent of the problem. And yet, the arts is such a compelling idea that it refuses to die on the vine and that even with little extra added stimulation we are finding constantly expanding enrollment and interest in all phases. And I am sure that with any sort of real effort directed toward the development of truly adequate facilities, the expansion of student interest would be vastly out of proportion to the financial expense to any college.

The main problem though remains one of experience. It is difficult enough to convince anyone that having twenty-twenty vision does not make them an art critic. Add to this a few ill-assorted courses with the word art in their titles and the job is nearly insurmountable. The problem lies in just this understanding of art as an experience, and that the creative and sensual aspects of the experience are different from any other. Even though the subject may be used the same way, the way that the creative discipline fuses with it, changing both the subject and itself into something new is the essence of the experience.

Start with the simple revelation that a blue could not be visually reproduced from a verbal description of it and that they would both exist as perfectly good yet separate blues. The thing that is different from both is the fact. In both cases the artist has done something to the fact relative to the particular medium of each creative process. The fleeting factual experience has been intensified and made permanent to be experienced only on its own terms.

Experience Provides Knowledge

Dr. Taylor states, "such experience provides knowledge." We have earlier implied that it is a kind of knowledge that can direct and modify decisions. First comes the awareness of the infinite quantity of visual phenomena. Second, that the creative act, even to the small degree that a student not primarily concerned with the arts can experience it, is something much more than the accumulation of data or the ordering of it into established cubbyholes. It can make the student aware that real understanding and awareness has to do with something that includes, yet is more than, logic.

I am not deriding logic as the key rational thought process, but the word in its common usage has begun to mean much more than that. It is a "call word" meaning "good." It is as though we are once again faced with the French Rationalists whose great words "the mind" and "reason," which are so much more encompassing than "logic," have been rendered down through the centuries so that there is not a drop of blood left in them.

The realization of the different kinds of knowledge and learning can be discovered through the experience of both the order and the mystery of the visual creative process. The sense of the rewards of this experience cannot be gotten through a verbal description of the process. It is a sense that is not only essential to the artist but to every student, if his awareness, the key measure of the worth of his education, is to be complete.

Completeness Is Essential

In the age of specialists and goal-directed programs the idea of completeness is almost archaic. However, completeness still seems to be the only thing that makes sense in terms of human values. Such visual and creative experience is necessary for completeness. And, completeness within the undergraduate student is the best thing that the small liberal arts college can offer. No matter how much one area of the curriculum is bolstered it can never compete with the large university. However, the small institution is at an advantage in that it can present its balance on a scale that is meaningful to the undergraduate. It is one thing to enumerate the impressive list of schools comprising a university and is another to be personally familiar with all the parts of your college both physically and intellectually.

No desired program for progress ever achieves anything by excluding the unfamiliar or unpleasant from consideration. What you ignore will not go away.

Ignorance is error whether it is a mistaken calculation or a well-meaning oversight. In the frantic clamor of the international race and its demands on education it is important that the liberal arts college remember its real goals and what it can do best. Effective human progress is what counts and it can only be made by men attuned to the vast possibilities of discovery through new experience.

*College Opens With Record Enrollment;
New Courses Offered in Russian, Geology;
Residence Hall for Women Occupied*

CROSS-CUTTING THE CAMPUS

JUNIATA WELCOMED a record number of 299 new students to the campus September 10 to open the 87th year.

The incoming class increased the college's total enrollment to another high of 846 for the Fall term. Last year's previous high was 826.

The new students were selected from a total of 766 applications among 4,859 who inquired about admission between September 1961 and the end of August. Included among the newcomers were 139 men and 143 women—a total of 279—reporting as freshmen. In addition, there were 16 men and four women transfers.

A registration summary released by Registrar Ronald L. Cherry showed an all-time high of 753 resident students, 61 non-resident and 32 unclassified and special.

An increase in the number of women students, made possible by a new residence hall, reduced the ratio of men to women. There are 451 men and 395 women in the total. Among resident students, there is a lower ratio of 390 men and 363 women.

Russian Is Taught

THE TEACHING of Russian is one of the additions to the College's academic program in 1962-63.

Twenty-five students have enrolled in a class in Elementary Russian which is being taught by Prof. George T. Dolnikowski, assistant professor of modern languages who has returned this year from a leave of absence to study on his doctorate at Harvard.

One-half of Juniata's freshman class are coeds this year and the upper-classmen were eager to test their reactions to "Button Frosh!"

Professor Dolnikowski (a former 'displaced person' from Russia) stated that such languages as Russian are "becoming more important in world affairs" and it is necessary "for our people to have greater knowledge of these languages."

New Laboratories

A LABORATORY-CLASSROOM for the College's newest course in geology has been provided by remodeling the ground floor of Students Hall. Fifty students are enrolled in two sections of General Geology.

In an effort to relieve over-crowding in the department of economics and business administration, the College has converted former office space into a statistics laboratory and classroom in Students Hall.

South Hall Opened

ANOTHER MODERN new residence hall for 150 women, known as South Hall, was occupied by students in September.

Construction of the $660,000, three-story, L-shaped building was completed by Paul E. Hickes, Alexandria, Pa., contractor. It was financed in part by a college housing loan from the Government's Community Facilities Administration.

The new residence is used to replace present facilities rather than be an addition to the plant. Women students have been moved from old dormitory rooms in Founders Hall and parts of Oneida Hall.

Dedication of the new residence was scheduled for Parents Day, November 10.

ASSOCIATE SECRETARY NAMED

A FORMER HUNTINGDON resident, William B. Martin '59, has been appointed associate alumni secretary and director of placement at the College.

Martin, 33, former personnel manager of the Sears store in Abington, Pa., is working with Harold B. Brumbaugh '33, assistant to the president, who has been named director of development. Mr. Brumbaugh will continue this year as Alumni Secretary.

Since graduation from Juniata with a B.S. degree after majoring in business administration and economics, Bill Martin has been employed by Sears, Roebuck and Company. He was a management trainee in York, later became a department manager, and then was advanced to the personnel staff in Philadelphia.

Martin, a Navy veteran of World War II and the Korean conflict, is married to Barbara Diven, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Diven of Mount Union. They have one son, William David, 1½. Martin's father was manager of the Haines Shoe Store in Huntingdon and his mother managed the Haines Store in Mount Union.

Prior to attending Juniata, Martin worked at shoe stores in Huntingdon, Mount Joy, and Columbia, Pa. While enrolled at Juniata, he was a salesman and buyer for Westbrook shoe store (1956-59). He was one of the organizers of the Huntingdon chapter of the Junior Chamber of Commerce and served as a director.

Bill will supervise the alumni records and placement records; organize class reunions, homecoming and meetings of local associations; assist with the Alumni Fund; distribute class and local newsletters; assist with the Alumni Bulletin; aid in undergraduate cultivation; and direct the activities of the Parents Association and Juniata College Admissions Counselors.

Finian's Rainbow

A SNAPPY and amusing Broadway musical, Finian's Rainbow, was scheduled by students as a highlight of their Parents Weekend Nov. 9-10.

In this fantasy of folklore and romance in which a young Irishman discovers why all Americans are millionaires, the lead roles were held by Bruce Davis, Crownsville, Md.; Marion Kerchner, Maple Shade, N. J.; Ted Volinsky, Harrisburg; Jesse Wright, Hollidaysburg; Phil Fair, Altoona; and Lynn Fichter, Pittsburgh.

The musical was directed by Clayton Briggs, assistant professor of English, in cooperation with Mary Knier, student coordinator from Malvern, Pa. Proceeds help to boost the Juniata World Service Fund.

News Briefs

THE EMINENT director of the Museum of Comparative Zoology, Harvard University, Dr. Ernest Mayr, was the Will Judy lecturer at the College Oct. 25-26. This lectureship was established in 1960 with a gift of $20,000 from Capt. Will Judy of Chicago "to enrich the academic program of the college." . . . Samuel Sandmel, provost and professor of Bible and Hellenistic Literature, Hebrew Union College, was a Danforth lecturer at Juniata October 1 . . . Huntingdon's opening community concert, Panhellenion Folk Festival of Greek dancers, was held in Oller Hall October 9 . . . The Student Senate sponsored a visit of the Red Cross bloodmobile on the campus October 17 . . . Students of the College conducted their annual "community chest" campaign for the Juniata World Service Fund in October.

Five juniors are representing Juniata in a program of undergraduate study in West Germany this year. Students from five other Church of the Brethren colleges are studying at Marburg University. Two of the five are Betty Jo Miller, Malvern (left) and Nancy E. Graybill, Manheim. Others are Carol L. Barnhart, Millersburg, Ronald M. Smelser, Medina, O., and John L. Tobias, Lebanon.

COLLEGE GIVEN $400,000 CHALLENGE GIFT

JUNIATA COLLEGE has received its largest single grant in history—a $400,000 “challenge gift” from the Longwood Foundation of Wilmington, Del., toward construction of a chemistry-geology building in its proposed $1,750,000 Science Center.

Announcement of this contribution to the college’s $5,350,000 development campaign was described by President Calvert N. Ellis, as a “major break-through” in the long-range program. He said that the gift is a vote of confidence not only in Juniata but in this type of college.

The grant is “contingent upon raising the remaining funds (toward a $800,000 chemistry building) and starting construction not later than May 1, 1964,” the Foundation stated. Hence, the grant is described as a “challenge gift.”

Plans for Juniata’s four-unit science complex are possibly the “most pre-tentious” for any small college in the East. Space will be provided in four separate, but connecting, units for the departments of biology, chemistry, geology and physics.

Although the estimated cost may be “almost two million,” the wing for chemistry and geology is expected to be built for $800,000.

One of the major objectives in Juniata’s development program has been a Science Center to relieve excessively crowded conditions and “help to maintain the college’s outstanding record in producing scientists.” The site has been selected on the west side of Moore Street across from the area where the new library is under construction.

In requesting the Longwood “challenge gift,” President Ellis had stressed that “Juniata College is young but its graduates have given the institution a reputation particularly in the sciences.”

Library Is Started

CONSTRUCTION of the College’s new $603,000 library is proceeding “on schedule” in another major step of the current development program.

Concrete walls for the basement have been poured for the three-floor, brick structure which is scheduled for completion August 1, 1963.

The building got under way August 20 after acceptance of a low bid of $498,700 for the general construction by Paul E. Hickes, Alexandria, Pa., contractor.

Replacement of the present College Library, erected in 1907 through the generosity of Andrew Carnegie, has been considered “primary business” in the college’s long-range development.

Kresge Gives $25,000

THE KRESGE FOUNDATION of Detroit, Mich., has authorized a grant of $25,-

ECONOMY IN READJUSTMENT . . . NO DEPRESSION

OUR ECONOMY is going through “the readjustment period that followed the post-war expansion . . . and our present problem is how to get out of the period of slow business,” declared a distinguished Wall Street financial adviser who was a guest on Juniata’s campus this fall.

Thurston P. Blodgett, vice-president and chairman of the investment committee of the Broad Street Group of Mutual Funds and of Tri-Continental Corporation of New York City, maintained that there will not be a depression and stated emphatically that “politically, it would not be tolerated.”

He pointed out that there is a close tie between politics and economics when he addressed a group of Juniata Valley businessmen. He also spoke to classes in economics and business administration.

Mr. Blodgett denied that we are now on an economic plateau of “high-level stagnation.” Business is going to have rougher competition and it will take more efficiency and better salesmanship.

In an interview with the editor of the campus newspaper, Mr. Blodgett said “the product of the small college is more hand-made than those coming from the factory-like atmosphere of the large university.” He also said that the small colleges are often under-rated.

Mr. Blodgett was accompanied to the campus by Dr. John C. Baker, vice-chairman of the board of trustees and president emeritus of Ohio University.

000 toward the College's library building now under construction.

The grant, according to Amos F. Gregory, secretary of the Kresge Foundation, is "conditional upon your College raising the balance of the required funds in contributions from others on or before July 1, 1964, for this building."

In acknowledging this "challenge matching gift," President Ellis stated that "we are greatly appreciative of this commitment and assure you that it will be a stimulus for us to complete the funds for the library."

The appeal to the Foundation was based on the premise that "Juniata College has made a contribution to higher education out of all proportion to its size and resources."

Fogelsanger Bequest

A BEQUEST of $34,955 from the estate of the late John Mervin Fogelsanger, former chairman of the finance committee on the board of trustees, has been received by the College for a trust endowment fund.

The money came to Juniata following settlement of the estate of Mr. Fogelsanger's late wife, Nora, who died this year.

Mr. Fogelsanger served as a member of the board from 1914-1936 and was a long-time associate of the late J. J. Oller. He was a brother of Mrs. Ross Murphy of Shippensburg.

Harley Scholarship

A SCHOLARSHIP FUND has been established by William Price Harley '11 and his wife, Ruth Cunningham Harley '27, of Shippensburg, Pa., to provide financial assistance to worthy students who are preparing for teaching, the Christian ministry or pre-medical science at Juniata College.

The fund will be known as the W. P. and Ruth C. Harley Scholarship. It will be available to students who have completed satisfactorily the first year.

Professor Harley was former supervising principal of schools at Mount Union and Williamsburg, Pa. He was for 30 years director of student teaching at Shippensburg State College.

ACCREDITATION REAFFIRMED

THE ACCREDITATION of Juniata College has been reaffirmed by the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

In its report to the college, a team of representatives supported the assumption of the Commission "that renewal of the Middle States Accreditation of Juniata College may be taken for granted." The team conducted its evaluation last February and the Commission met in July.

In supporting renewal, the team stated that "it trusts that this report to the college properly reflects the assigned roles of consultant and constructive critic of the instructional program."

Observation on other phases of the college "which are germane to the total collegiate context in which the instructional program exists and which have their effect on the program" are contained in the report.

In the foreword to the report, prepared by the chairman, the Rev. Edward F. Clark, president of Saint Peter's College, it was stated:

"Juniata College shares the virtues of the majority of good small private colleges everywhere. The college, for example, knows why it exists, and is alert and anxious to fulfill its purpose; it has on the staff its fair share, among faculty and students, of keen minds, eager hands, loyal hearts and impatient critics . . .

"It offers a program of studies that is good—not distinctive, but distinctive notes are there; it is willing to experiment; it points with pride to its many achievements and properly uses them as incentives to continuing improvements; its trustees are proud of their trust and anxious for the college; it has a healthy mood of dissatisfaction; its 'family' concept is important to students and faculty alike."

The report refers also to the defects which Juniata shares with "the majority of good, small private colleges everywhere." Among these are "the relative inadequacy of the financial situation . . . doubling the tasks on the devoted . . . academic offering beyond the budget or student enrollment or faculty strength . . . the family spirit which provides easy access that shortcuts organizational charts."

"Its virtues now far outweigh its faults," the foreword reads. "Its enthusiasm for its purpose, the record and recognition of its graduates, the eagerness of its staff for improvement, its basic strengths, the plans for the future, the ability of all who are concerned with its operation, assure for the future even a more pronounced tilting of the scale."

The strong position of the sciences at Juniata College was recognized in the report. However, it pointed out that "in one sense commendable, it has given rise to considerable misunderstanding on the part of the faculty in the other divisions."

The team stated that "the college should evaluate the position of each of these divisions (humanities, social studies, natural sciences) in terms of the college's educational philosophy and objectives." It was recommended that "the issue should be openly discussed by the faculty and the administration . . ."

In another part of the report on student personnel services, the committee stated:

"The visitor to Juniata College is soon impressed with the spirit which pervades the campus and the sense of loyalty which has been engendered among the undergraduates. Friendliness and cordiality reflect a generally high morale and suggest that the college has been markedly successful in conveying the essence of its traditions and aims to the individual student."

"In a highly secular and materialistic world, Juniata appears also to be reasonably successful in preserving or inculcating Christian attitudes and ideals among the students . . ."

THE JUNIATA SPORTS PARADE

Bunn Juggles Grid Personnel

IT WAS NO SECRET that Juniata's Indians went into the 1962 football season with a "thin bench." After an easy opening game victory over Trenton State 44-0, the manpower shortage was quite evident in the tough 22-14 loss to Moravian and became more obvious when the Tribe bowed to Indiana State 14-6. Actually, both defeats came in the fourth quarter.

However, Coach Ken Bunn was doing a highly commendable job of juggling personnel with a 33-man squad—smallest in number since the late '30s.

He formed a rugged front line by shifting Grey Berrier from fullback to end, Gawen Stoker from center to tackle, and Co-captain Dave Oliver to center. They joined Bill Crowell, junior guard who was voted "most outstanding lineman" and named to the ECAC college division first team; Al Tavalisky, senior end; and two promising sophomores, Pete Marzio and Duane Ruble. Jeff Treese, a junior, also was virtually a starting lineman.

Once again the backfield was of the "pony" variety with Ron Poruban, senior quarterback, the heaviest at 170. Barry Broadwater, sophomore, weighs only 150; Vince Valicenti, senior, goes 165; and Tony Faber, another senior who was shifted to fullback, is 170.

Barry Moore, senior Dean's List quarterback, Larry Skinner and Ron Housel at halfbacks, and Don Corle, fullback, formed the second unit backfield. However, the replacements on the line lacked experience except for John Lersch, end, and Ed Fleck, 155-pound guard, both sophomores.

Spirit and Desire

BOASTING FIVE straight undefeated seasons and an amazing 34-meet winning streak, the cross-country team won its opener against Moravian.

Born near Mill Creek in 1860, Mr. Boring was one of those rare souls whose fame rests not only on advanced years but on the character that became a glowing part of his physical and spiritual life through the years. He was one of 14 children, 12 of whom grew to adulthood. Five in the family passed the 90-year mark.

At the age of 17, he became one of the early students of the Brethren's Normal School in 1877, just one year after its founding. After graduation in 1880, he taught school for many years, all in Pennsylvania with the exception of one year at Peabody, Kan.

DR. J. WARREN HERSHBERGER

DR. J. WARREN HERSHBERGER '14, whose unexpected death July 16, 1962, was reported in the Summer Bulletin, has been described as "Martinsburg's greatest teacher" in a memorial editorial. He was one of the outstanding community leaders of the Morrisons Cove and "for 42 years taught the people of Martinsburg how to work together toward a common goal."

A tireless physician, Dr. Hershberger (age 74) displayed "devotion and leadership in many fields." Included among those which "felt the effect of his strength, energy and courage" were Juniata College (he was immediate past president of the board of trustees), Memorial Church of the Brethren, Nason Hospital, Blair County Airport and Morrisons Cove Memorial Park.

In addition, he was president of the First National Bank of Martinsburg until its merger with the Hollidaysburg Trust Company when he became a director of the larger bank.

Dr. Hershberger was a founder of the Martinsburg Community Fund and in 1932-33 served as president of the Martinsburg Booster Association. He was general chairman of the borough's centennial celebration, an event credited by many as setting the stage for the success of later civic endeavors.

A one-time assistant station master in Martinsburg, Dr. Hershberger decided to become a doctor. He earned his way through Juniata Academy, the University of Pittsburgh and the Medical School of the University of Bordeaux, France. He began his practice in Martinsburg in 1921 as a general practitioner and an eye, ear, nose and throat specialist.
